5:30 pm to 9:00 pm

Genzyme Corporation
2 Science Center Lecture Hall
49 New York Ave., Framingham, MA 01701

PROGRAM SUMMARY:

Looking to be more successful in gaining new opportunities within the workplace? Or need advice for making the right impression with a potential employer? Discerning employees know there’s a need to go beyond working hard and hoping someone else recognizes them for new openings or promotions. To advance in the workplace it’s critical to learn to “market yourself” and be acknowledged for your unique talents and capabilities. In the competitive world of biopharm, how do you communicate and honestly present yourself in an advantageous way? This session will examine strategies for marketing yourself from multiple perspectives within the industry. The Panelists, drawing from a wealth of experience in recruiting and developing talent in biotech, will provide key insights for boosting personal success throughout the life cycle of a working professional (from the initial interview to mid-level career).

So what are you waiting for? Come network (an active component of marketing yourself) and learn the considerations specific to biopharm; empowering you to market yourself to achieve personal success.

PANELISTS:

Alison Neely, Recruiting Partner – Pharmaceutical Operations & Technology, Biogen Idec
Alison has been with Biogen Idec for 1.5 years and is a Recruiting Partner in Cambridge, MA, currently focused on staffing within the Pharmaceutical Operations & Technology division. Alison is currently the Lead Recruiting Partner for Cambridge Manufacturing and Technical Development (an organization with 275 employees split between NC and MA). Prior to joining Biogen Idec, she was a Senior Search Consultant, Life Sciences at HireMinds for 4.5 years, where she led the permanent staffing division, which supported hiring in the Greater Boston area for 50 biotech clients. Before joining the recruiting/staffing industry, Alison received her B.S degree in Microbiology from Virginia Tech.
